

Does Voting Really Matter?

(The answer may surprise you!)

Claire Wolfe cynically offers, "Don't vote. It only encourages them."

Howard Phillips says, "In politics, your vote is the currency of your virtue."

Most of us fall in between these sentiments. We really want to be good citizens and we really want to do what's right. But no matter who we vote for, our beloved country seems to continue its slide into the abyss. So many of us drop out. "What's the use? The candidates are all the same. No matter who I vote for, nothing changes."

Poll after poll consistently shows that the people in this country who work and pay the bills are increasingly disappointed with the direction we are going. Despair and disenfranchisement have replaced optimism, and many feel the worst is yet to come.

And yet, the two major parties continue to present us with their newest rising stars. Candidates, they say, who will bring "change" to America. But for most, "change" just means tweaking the system. However, many of us have concluded that the system itself is broken.

Unfortunately, one of the key processes for fixing things is also broken. By that I mean ELECTIONS. Besides the fact that the parties frequently give us a practical choice between just two candidates in November, neither of whom we trust, we also have a growing body of evidence that the Election Process is being hacked. People behind the scenes who put their own interests above yours are changing the results of elections, so the voice of the people is never heard.

Josef Stalin said, "Those who cast the votes decide nothing. Those who count the votes decide everything." Instead of transparent and easily auditable elections, with ballots counted in the open at the precincts, verified by the people in the precincts, we now have "black box" voting managed by computers (and the unknown people who program them). How do you know how many people voted for Candidate A, or for another expensive bond issue?

YOU DON'T. The people we may be trying to replace are counting the votes and telling you to trust them with the election results. Do you really believe that the American electorate deliberately voted our country into the mess we are in?

We're working hard on a solution, but before we can implement a solution, you need to know there is a problem. So please check out the following web-based resources if you have internet access. If not, please call the number below and ask for additional information on Vote Fraud.

We are mobilizing the American people to take advantage of what might be our last opportunity to take back control of our lives and our country. I hope you will join us.

Steve Coerper - Phone (919) 571-7795 steve@rogershermansociety.com

Web site for online resources: <http://tinyurl.com/3dcvjl>